

Chapter 4: Committed To Commitment – Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness<sup>1</sup>

---

Author: Michael Finkle

Organization: King County District Court

©2022 Washington State Society of Healthcare Attorneys and Washington State Hospital Association. All rights reserved.

Disclaimer: This publication is designed to provide accurate and authoritative information with respect to the subject matter covered. It is provided with the understanding that neither the publisher nor any editor, author, or contributor hereto, is engaged in rendering legal or other professional services. The information contained herein represents the views of those participating in the project, and not, when applicable, any governmental agency or employer of such participant. Neither the publisher, nor any editor, author, nor contributor hereto warrants that any information contained herein is complete or accurate. If legal advice or other expert assistance is required, the services of a qualified licensed professional should be sought.

Reference Date: The author updated this chapter from reference materials that were available as of June 30, 2022.

Biography

Judge Michael J. Finkle

Michael Finkle has served as a judge of the King County District Court (KCDC) since March, 2010. He currently presides at the KCDC Issaquah courthouse, where he handles primarily civil matters and East King County Regional Youth Traffic Court. Judge Finkle also has an extensive background in criminal law; In addition to previously serving as a criminal trial judge, Judge Finkle has presided over the district court's Regional Mental Health Court and Regional Veterans Court.

Throughout his judicial career, Judge Finkle has been a leader in working to improve the judicial system. He chaired the groups that created King County's Veterans Court and Youth Court. Judge Finkle currently chairs the statewide subcommittee that is responsible for creating and maintaining standard form orders for criminal cases in which defendants have a mental illness that might interfere with their ability to proceed. He also serves on the statewide subcommittee that is responsible for creating and maintaining forms for civil protection order cases. Since 2014 Judge Finkle has served on a number of other statewide committees, such as the Judicial Assistance Services Program.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

Judge Finkle is known throughout the state for his expertise in mental health law and the judicial system. He currently serves on the “Trueblood General Advisory Committee”, or GAC. The GAC is part of the governance structure for a settlement agreement to improve the state’s response to people who have a mental illness and come into contact with the criminal justice system. He has also served on King County’s Mental Illness and Drug Dependency (MIDD) Oversight Committee, which administers a multi-million-dollar budget. The MIDD was established to help stabilize people who have mental illness or chemical dependency and to divert them from jails and emergency rooms by giving them proper treatment.

Judge Finkle graduated from the UCLA School of Law, where he was a managing editor of the UCLA Law Review. He also holds a Bachelor of Business Administration from Loyola Marymount University and a Master of Business Administration from Seattle University.

Judge Finkle began his legal career in 1981 as a business lawyer at a medium size law firm. In 1986, he entered public service as a deputy city attorney with the Los Angeles City Attorney's Office. In 1990, Judge Finkle joined the Seattle City Attorney’s Office, where he served as a supervising attorney in the Criminal Division until he took the bench in 2010.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

Chapter Outline

4.1 Introduction .....4-2

4.2 Involuntary Civil Commitment through Intervention of a Mental Health Professional .....4-2

4.2.1 Introductory Concepts..... 4-2

4.2.2 Parties to the Commitment Proceedings... 4-2

4.2.3 How the Process Works... 4-2

4.2.3.1 Initial Detention for Up to 72 Hours..... 4-2

4.2.3.2 Petition for Additional Treatment..... 4-3

4.2.3.3 If Petitioner Prevails At Probable Cause Hearing..... 4-3

4.2.3.4 If Petitioner Prevails At 90-Day Hearing..... 4-3

4.2.3.5 Renewing 90-Day Commitment ..... 4-3

4.2.3.6 Early Release From Inpatient Commitment..... 4-3

4.3 Involuntary Criminal Commitment Through Criminal System .....4-3

4.3.1 Defendants Who Are Unable To Stand Trial ..... 4-4

4.3.1.1 Evaluating The Ability To Stand Trial ..... 4-4

4.3.1.2 Eligibility For Restoration Treatment For Felony Defendants ..... 4-4

4.3.1.3 Eligibility For Restoration Treatment For Non-Felony Defendants ..... 4-4

4.3.2 Defendants Who Are Acquitted By Reason Of Mental Status..... 4-5

4.3.2.1 Same Procedures For Felonies And Non-Felonies ..... 4-5

4.3.2.2 How Those Procedures Work ..... 4-5

4.3.2.3 Diminished Capacity Distinguished ..... 4-5

4.4 Involuntary Civil Commitment Through Referral From Criminal System .....4-5

4.4.1 Felony Defendant Following Proceedings For Ability To Stand Trial ..... 4-5

4.4.2 Non-Felony Defendant Following Proceedings For Ability To Stand Trial ..... 4-6

4.4.2.1 Non-Felony Defendant Remaining Unable To Stand Trial Following Treatment..... 4-6

4.4.2.2 Non-Felony Defendant Not Eligible For Treatment..... 4-6

4.4.3 Felony Or Non-Felony Defendant Following Commitment Based On Mental Status Defense..... 4-6

4.4.4 Felony Or Non-Felony Defendant Based Solely On Ability to Stand Trial or Mental Status Evaluation ..... 4-6

4.5 “Voluntary” Criminal Commitment Through Mental Health Courts .....4-6

4.5.1 Mental Health Courts As Therapeutic Courts ..... 4-7

4.5.2 Philosophy Of Mental Health Courts ..... 4-7

4.5.3 Participation Based Upon Crime Type And/Or Criminal History ..... 4-8

4.5.4 Structure Governing Form Of Voluntary Criminal Commitment ..... 4-8

4.5.4.1 Pure Diversion System ..... 4-8

4.5.4.2 Pure Plea System ..... 4-9

4.5.4.3 Hybrid System ..... 4-9

4.5.5 King County District Court’s Regional Mental Health Court (KCRMHC) ..... 4-9

4.5.5.1 KCRMHC Program Objectives ..... 4-9

4.5.5.2 KCRMHC Eligibility Requirements ..... 4-9

4.5.5.3 KCRMHC Team ..... 4-10

4.5.6 Seattle Municipal Court’s Mental Health Court (SMMHC) ..... 4-11

4.5.6.1 Court’s Goals ..... 4-11

4.5.6.2 SMMHC Eligibility Requirements ..... 4-11

4.5.7 Relationship Between Mental Health Court Structure And Voluntary Commitment ..... 4-11

4.5.8 Need For Outcome Measures ..... 4-12

4.6 Conclusion .....4-12

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

4.1 Introduction

The concept of “commitment” based on mental illness is a familiar one in today’s society. Indeed, television crime dramas and movies often include commitment based on mental illness as part of their storylines. But many of those depictions gloss over the very real differences between the various models of involuntary treatment interventions. As used in this chapter, “commitment” refers to an order by a Washington court that an adult undergo some form of mental health treatment.<sup>2</sup> With the exception of “voluntary” commitment through a mental health court as described in section 5, that commitment is involuntary. Involuntary mental health treatment can occur in a variety of settings and can be initiated through the intervention of mental health professionals or law enforcement.<sup>3</sup> There are restrictive civil commitment orders that require care in settings such as a state psychiatric hospital or other secure psychiatric facility licensed by the state. The state psychiatric hospitals and other secure facilities are designed to provide treatment on an inpatient basis to people who have severe and chronic mental illness. There are also less restrictive orders, which require care in a variety of settings ranging from residential placements in group facilities to independent living arrangements with outpatient mental health care. Although involuntary commitment is intrinsically civil in nature it can be initiated by a criminal case. Commitment arising through the intervention of a mental health professional is referred to in this chapter as civil commitment; commitment arising out of a criminal case is referred to in this chapter as criminal commitment.

This chapter explores the involuntary commitment process through the civil<sup>4</sup> and criminal<sup>5</sup> systems.<sup>6</sup> It also identifies areas in which the two commitment systems intersect.<sup>7</sup> The chapter concludes by discussing how the advent of mental health courts has created a relatively new type of “voluntary” criminal commitment as a proactive step in reducing involuntary civil or criminal commitment for the population that the mental health court serves.<sup>8</sup>

4.2 Involuntary Civil Commitment through Intervention of a Mental Health Professional

Pursuant to Chapter 71.05 RCW, an involuntary civil commitment of an adult occurs when a mental health professional detains a person for evaluation and treatment. To understand Chapter 71.05 RCW’s civil commitment process, one must understand the roles of the various players and the procedural road that must be followed. Chapter 71.05 RCW provides information about both the players’ roles and the procedural road.<sup>9</sup> For purposes of this article, Chapter 71.05 RCW is summarized in very broad terms rather than in more practice-oriented terms.<sup>10</sup>

4.2.1 Introductory Concepts

Only the State, as the petitioner, may seek to civilly commit an adult, as respondent, under Chapter 71.05 RCW. Typically, though not always, court-appointed counsel represents the respondent. Generally speaking, a person may be civilly committed if, as a result of a mental disorder, he or she presents a likelihood of serious harm or is gravely disabled, or is in need of assisted outpatient behavioral health treatment.<sup>11</sup> The phrases “mental disorder,” “likelihood of serious harm” and “gravely disabled” are specifically defined in Chapter 71.05 RCW.<sup>12</sup>

4.2.2 Parties to the Commitment Proceedings

The petitioner is the party seeking to civilly commit an individual under Chapter 71.05 RCW. Although as a practical matter that means the State, the petition is filed by an individual or agency authorized to do so under the statute. The person the petitioner seeks to commit is the respondent. A Designated Crisis Responder, referred to as a DCR, initiates civil commitment proceedings.<sup>13</sup> A DCR is the mental health professional appointed by the county or other authority authorized by rule to perform the duties specified in Chapter 71.05 RCW.<sup>14</sup> Depending upon the particular facts and circumstances of the case, the State is represented by the County Prosecutor or the Attorney General.<sup>15</sup>

4.2.3 How the Process Works

This next section focuses primarily on the “commitment” portion of Chapter 71.05 RCW, with limited discussion of the respondent’s rights. The limited discussion is not intended to downplay the importance of the respondent’s rights, either from a constitutional or a morality standpoint, but rather to focus on those aspects of civil commitment that intersect with the criminal justice.

4.2.3.1 Initial Detention for Up to 72 Hours

The DCR initiates the civil commitment process in one of two ways. One alternative is an emergency petition,<sup>16</sup> and the other is a non-emergency petition.<sup>17</sup> This first step, whether on an emergency or non-emergency basis, is referred to as an initial detention, with the respondent being detained at an evaluation and treatment facility for up to 120 hours.<sup>18</sup>

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

4.2.3.2 Petition for Additional Treatment

The evaluation and treatment facility has up to 120 hours to evaluate the respondent.<sup>19</sup> If the facility determines that mental health treatment is appropriate and that the statutory requirements are satisfied, the facility may file a petition for either 14 days of inpatient or 90 days of a less restrictive alternative treatment.<sup>20</sup> This is referred to as a probable cause hearing.<sup>21</sup> If the facility does not file a petition for a probable cause hearing, or if it does not meet its burden of proof at the hearing,<sup>22</sup> then it must release the respondent.<sup>23</sup> Note that the DCR neither determines whether to file, nor actually files, the petition. That is the prerogative of the evaluation and treatment facility.<sup>24</sup>

4.2.3.3 If Petitioner Prevails At Probable Cause Hearing

If the petitioner meets its burden, the court must consider less restrictive alternatives to involuntary detention and treatment. If the court finds that no such alternatives are in the best interests of the respondent or of others, the court must order that the respondent be detained for up to 14 days of inpatient treatment. On the other hand, if the court finds that treatment in a less restrictive setting is in the best interests of the respondent or others, the court must order the respondent into a less restrictive course of treatment for up to 90 days.

The respondent must be released at the end of the 14-day period unless the respondent agrees to further treatment on a voluntary basis or is the subject of a petition for additional confinement, referred to in this chapter as a 90-day hearing.<sup>25</sup>

4.2.3.4 If Petitioner Prevails At 90-Day Hearing

If the petitioner meets its burden of proof at the 90-day hearing, then the respondent will be placed in a treatment program for up to 90 days. The program will either be inpatient or outpatient, depending upon the findings of facts and conclusions of law in the particular case.<sup>26</sup> If the commitment is based upon a referral from the criminal justice system pursuant to RCW 71.05.280(3), then the period of inpatient or less restrictive treatment is up to 180 days instead of up to 90 days.<sup>27</sup>

4.2.3.5 Renewing 90-Day Commitment

At the end of the 90-day treatment period, the facility must release the respondent unless the facility (if inpatient treatment) or the DCR (if less restrictive treatment) petitions for continued commitment. If the court or jury finds that the grounds for additional confinement have been established, the court may order the respondent committed for up to an additional 180-day period. At the end of the 180-day renewal period, the respondent must be released unless another renewal petition is filed. Successive 180-day commitments are permissible on the same grounds and procedures as for the original 180-day renewal. The respondent may not be detained unless a valid commitment order is in effect, and no commitment order may exceed 180 days.<sup>28</sup>

4.2.3.6 Early Release From Inpatient Commitment

Chapter 71.05 RCW provides a mechanism for a respondent's early release from an inpatient commitment. It also provides a mechanism for revoking the early conditional release.<sup>29</sup>

4.3 Involuntary Criminal Commitment Through Criminal System

Involuntary commitment is criminal in nature when it results from mental illness in the context of a criminal prosecution. The criminal justice system can serve as a catalyst for involuntary commitment in either of two ways. The first is when a defendant's mental illness renders him or her unable to stand trial in the case.<sup>30</sup> The second is when a defendant is acquitted of the crime(s) charged by reason of mental status at the time of the alleged offense.<sup>31</sup> The statutes use the defined phrase "incompetency"<sup>32</sup> to refer to a person who is unable to stand trial based on mental illness. The term "incompetency" incorporates the phrase "mental disease or defect".<sup>33</sup> The statute also uses the phrase "insanity" to refer to a mental status defense, and that phrase also incorporates the phrase "mental disease or defect".<sup>34</sup> The phrase "mental disease or defect" is not defined by statute.<sup>35</sup> I consider the above terms to be pejorative and demeaning to someone who is in the throes of a highly symptomatic mental illness. Accordingly, I will avoid them whenever possible, substituting the phrases "able to stand trial", "unable to stand trial", "able to proceed", "unable to proceed", "mental illness", or "mental status" or something along those lines.<sup>36</sup>

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

I have spoken with others about substituting the more respectful phrases in lieu of “incompetency”. Although I did not specifically raise the issue of a mental status defense, I believe the discussions apply equally. Although people have been sympathetic in my discussions, they have also raised three practical objections. I remain unconvinced by them and believe they are easily countered. The first objection is that the current terms are statutory phrases and therefore should be used. That is easily overcome by amending the statutes. The second objection is that there is a huge body of case law under the current terms. All that needs to be done to overcome that objection is to include in the amending legislation that the legislature is simply changing the term but not the meaning. And it would not be the first time the legislature changed a term but kept the same meaning. The third objection is that it would be too difficult to research that preexisting case law. My response would be to research both the former and the new terms. That is what happens anytime a term is changed by legislation.

4.3.1 Defendants Who Are Unable To Stand Trial<sup>37</sup>

Ability to stand trial is best described by looking at the circumstances under which a defendant charged with a crime may be found unable to stand trial. A defendant is unable to stand trial if he or she “lacks the capacity to understand the nature of the proceedings against him or her or to assist in his or her own defense as a result of mental [illness].”<sup>38</sup>

In 2015, the Legislature enacted stringent and quite specific time “guidelines” for the various stages of the process for determining ability to stand trial. They modified those guidelines and added mandatory limits in 2022. Those time deadlines and the logistics of the process are beyond the scope of this chapter.<sup>39</sup>

4.3.1.1 Evaluating The Ability To Stand Trial

Whenever a defendant’s ability to stand trial is at issue, the court must order an evaluation.<sup>40</sup> The contents of the evaluation are the same for felony and non-felony cases,<sup>41</sup> including an opinion whether the defendant should be evaluated by a DCR for civil commitment.<sup>42</sup> Once the trial court finds that the defendant is unable to stand trial, the nature of the charge governs the nature of the subsequent proceedings.<sup>43</sup> There is one procedure that applies to felony matters<sup>44</sup>, and a second procedure, with two subparts, that applies to non-felony matters.<sup>45</sup>

4.3.1.2 Eligibility For Restoration Treatment For Felony Defendants

If a defendant charged with a felony is found unable to stand trial, the trial court must commit the defendant to the custody of the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS) for up to 90 days of inpatient or outpatient treatment if the defendant is charged with a Class A felony or a “violent” Class B felony,<sup>46</sup> or up to 45 days if the defendant is charged with a nonviolent Class B felony or a Class C felony.<sup>47</sup> If, after the treatment, the defendant remains unable to stand trial, the trial court has discretion to order the defendant to undergo an additional 90 days of restoration treatment.<sup>48</sup>

If the defendant is still unable to stand trial at the end of the optional second 90-day period, the trier of fact must answer two questions. The first is whether the defendant is a substantial danger to other persons or presents a substantial likelihood of committing criminal acts jeopardizing the public safety or security. The second is whether there is a substantial probability that the defendant will become able to stand trial within a reasonable time. If the answer to both questions is yes, then the trial court may extend the restoration treatment for up to another six months.<sup>49</sup>

4.3.1.3 Eligibility For Restoration Treatment For Non-Felony Defendants

If a defendant charged with a non-felony crime is found unable to stand trial, then the court must determine whether the defendant is eligible for restoration treatment. That determination impacts what happens next.

If the defendant is charged with a “serious offense”,<sup>50</sup> then the court must dismiss the case unless the prosecutor requests a hearing. At that hearing, if the prosecutor proves by a preponderance that there is a compelling state interest in ordering the defendant into restoration treatment, then the court must order DSHS to place the defendant into inpatient or outpatient restoration treatment.<sup>51</sup> If the defendant is not charged with a “serious offense,” then the court may not order the defendant to undergo restoration treatment.<sup>52</sup>

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

4.3.2 Defendants Who Are Acquitted By Reason Of Mental Status

A defendant charged with a crime may offer an affirmative defense referred to as a mental status defense. The defendant must establish that, at the time of the commission of the offense, as a result of mental illness, the defendant was unable to perceive the nature and quality of the act charged or was unable to tell right from wrong regarding the act charged.<sup>53</sup>

4.3.2.1 Same Procedures For Felonies And Non-Felonies

The process by which a criminal defendant asserts a mental status defense<sup>54</sup> is the same for felonies and for non-felonies. A criminal defendant may make a motion for a judgment of acquittal by reason of mental status. If the motion is denied, the defendant may raise the issue to the trier of fact at trial.<sup>55</sup> The defendant must establish the mental status defense by a preponderance of the evidence.<sup>56</sup>

4.3.2.2 How Those Procedures Work

If the judge grants the defendant's motion for judgment of acquittal by reason of mental status, or if the judge or jury renders a verdict at trial of not guilty by reason of mental status, the judge or jury must answer several questions regarding the defendant's potential future behavior.<sup>57</sup> The questions relate to whether the defendant is a substantial danger to other persons, or presents a substantial likelihood of committing criminal acts jeopardizing public safety or security, unless kept under further control. If the answer to either of those questions is yes, then the judge or jury must answer the additional question of whether it is in the best interests of the defendant and others that the defendant be placed in treatment that is less restrictive than detention in a state mental hospital.<sup>58</sup>

The answers to those questions determine what happens to the defendant after the acquittal. The defendant could be released outright, released into some form of less restrictive treatment, or committed to a state mental hospital.<sup>59</sup> The maximum length of the less restrictive treatment or commitment to a state mental hospital is the maximum possible sentence the defendant could have received for any offense charged for which the defendant was acquitted by reason of mental status.<sup>60</sup> In other words, even if the defendant were charged with three gross misdemeanors punishable by up to 364 days in jail each, the maximum length of time the defendant could be committed to a state mental hospital following an acquittal by reason of mental status of all three charges would be 364 days. There are procedures for conditional release, early release, and revocation of a conditional release.<sup>61</sup>

4.3.2.3 Diminished Capacity Distinguished

Diminished capacity is also a defense predicated upon the defendant's mental condition at the time of the alleged offense. "To maintain a diminished capacity defense, a defendant must produce expert testimony demonstrating that a mental disorder, not amounting to a [a mental status defense], impaired the defendant's ability to form the culpable mental state to commit the crime charged."<sup>62</sup> While a mental status defense is an affirmative defense, diminished capacity is really nothing more than a challenge to the relevant state of mind, accomplished through the use of expert testimony. If the defendant's proffered expert witness cannot render an opinion that the defendant's ability to form the requisite mental state was impaired, the expert's testimony will be excluded, and the jury will not hear the diminished capacity defense.

4.4 Involuntary Civil Commitment Through Referral From Criminal System

As a general proposition, the civil and criminal systems are separate and distinct from one another. But they tend to overlap when a criminal defendant has mental health issues impacting the ability to stand trial or providing a potential mental status defense. Depending on the specifics of the case, a criminal defendant might be referred for involuntary civil commitment at the end of his/her criminal commitment in the case or in place of his/her criminal commitment in the case.

4.4.1 Felony Defendant Following Proceedings For Ability To Stand Trial

If a defendant charged with a felony remains unable to stand trial at the end of the felony restoration period,<sup>63</sup> then the court must dismiss the charges without prejudice,<sup>64</sup> and refer the defendant for civil commitment evaluation.<sup>65</sup> Although the statute does not expressly state what happens if the defendant remains unable to stand trial after the additional six-month restoration period under RCW 10.77.086(5), the language of that subsection suggests that the court must commit the defendant to a state hospital. In any event, civil commitment proceedings based on a dismissal pursuant to RCW 10.77.086(5) would be for a 180-day civil commitment period. The resulting civil commitment hearing has a criminal element; although the state need not prove intent to commit the crime, the nexus between the disorder and the criminal act becomes crucial. The state must prove that the defendant (now referred to as the respondent) committed acts constituting a felony as a result of a mental illness and presents a substantial likelihood of repeating similar acts.<sup>66</sup> The elements of the crime, the nexus to the mental disorder and the substantial likelihood of repeating similar acts must be proven by clear, cogent and convincing evidence.<sup>67</sup>

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

4.4.2 Non-Felony Defendant Following Proceedings For Ability To Stand Trial

What happens to a defendant charged with a non-felony who is ultimately found unable to stand trial depends upon whether the defendant was or was not charged with a “serious offense” as defined in RCW 10.77.092.<sup>68</sup>

4.4.2.1 Non-Felony Defendant Remaining Unable To Stand Trial Following Treatment

If the defendant is charged with a serious offense but remains unable to stand trial following treatment,<sup>69</sup> the court must refer the defendant for consideration of civil commitment. If the defendant is in custody and not on conditional release at the time of the dismissal and referral, then the defendant must be referred to an evaluation and treatment facility for consideration of a full hearing for a 90-day inpatient or outpatient commitment.<sup>70</sup> If the defendant was on conditional release at the time of the dismissal, then the trial court must order the DCR to evaluate the defendant for consideration of a 14-day inpatient commitment or a 90-day less restrictive alternative.<sup>71</sup> Under either situation, the superior court must review a decision not to file a petition for civil commitment unless the DCR or professional person and the prosecuting attorney or attorney general’s office stipulate that the defendant does not present a likelihood of serious harm or is not gravely disabled.<sup>72</sup>

4.4.2.2 Non-Felony Defendant Not Eligible For Treatment

If the defendant is not eligible for restoration treatment, the court may stay or dismiss the proceedings and detain the defendant for sufficient time to allow the DCR to evaluate the defendant for consideration of civil commitment.<sup>73</sup> The commitment proceeding in this situation would be an initial detention.<sup>74</sup> Presumably if the court does not detain the defendant, it will release them outright.<sup>75</sup>

4.4.3 Felony Or Non-Felony Defendant Following Commitment Based On Mental Status Defense

Whenever a defendant who has been committed following an acquittal by reason of mental status has not been released within seven days of the maximum possible sentence, the professional person<sup>76</sup> in charge of the treatment facility may refer the defendant to the DCR for consideration of civil commitment proceedings if the professional person believes that the defendant presents a likelihood of serious harm or is gravely disabled due to a mental disorder.<sup>77</sup> Under these circumstances, the professional person must also provide a copy of all relevant information about the defendant to the DCR. The information may include the defendant’s likely release date, and the professional person must indicate why the professional person does not believe the defendant should be released.<sup>78</sup> A DCR who receives notice and records in this fashion must, prior to the expiration of the maximum sentence, determine whether to initiate civil commitment proceedings under Chapter 71.05 RCW.<sup>79</sup>

4.4.4 Felony Or Non-Felony Defendant Based Solely On Ability to Stand Trial Or Mental Status Evaluation

If the original evaluation for ability to stand trial or for a mental status defense includes an opinion that the defendant should be evaluated for civil commitment as discussed in section 3.1.1. above, then the court must order the DCR to evaluate the defendant for civil commitment. The timing of that evaluation depends upon the procedural setting of the case.<sup>80</sup> Nothing in the section conditions the court’s duty on a finding that the defendant is unable to stand trial. For example, the section expressly requires the evaluation prior to a convicted defendant’s release from custody if the defendant is sentenced to 24 months of confinement or less.

4.5 “Voluntary” Criminal Commitment Through Mental Health Courts<sup>81</sup>

The advent of “mental health courts” within the criminal justice system has created a new form of criminal commitment that can best be described as “voluntary” criminal commitment. Such a commitment is voluntary in the sense that the defendant agrees to comply with mental health treatment. In order to do so, however, the defendant must possess the ability to stand trial. It is “commitment” as defined in this chapter in the sense that the treatment conditions are court-ordered and are enforceable through the court’s power to impose criminal sanctions for willful non-compliance.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

This new voluntary criminal commitment can take one of two forms within mental health courts. In one form, the defendant enters into an agreement with the prosecution to engage in treatment. If the defendant successfully completes mental health court, the case is dismissed, and the defendant avoids a criminal conviction. This is often referred to as a “diversion”. In the other form, the defendant pleads guilty to one or more charges and engages in treatment as a condition of probation. Some mental health courts incorporate both forms, depending upon the facts of a particular case.

This section introduces the concept of mental health courts, which are a specific form of “therapeutic court”. It also identifies the philosophical and structural choices that shape mental health courts, and how those choices impact the form that voluntary criminal commitment takes. Finally, this section provides practical examples of how a mental health court might function by examining various practices within the King County District Court’s Regional Mental Health Court (KCRMHC) and the Seattle Municipal Court’s Mental Health Court (SMMHC).<sup>82</sup>

4.5.1 Mental Health Courts As Therapeutic Courts

Mental health courts are a subset of the broader category of “therapeutic courts”. In therapeutic courts, the prosecution and defense, along with various other courtroom participants, “collaborate” to try and resolve not just a criminal case but also a very specific issue underlying the alleged criminal behavior. In mental health courts, the very specific underlying issue is mental illness, often coupled with a co-occurring disorder such as alcohol or chemical dependency.<sup>83</sup>

Another way to view mental health courts is as an attempt to decrease the frequency of civil or criminal commitment for those who are charged with crimes. Mental health courts seek to do so by decreasing barriers to mental health treatment for people who might otherwise receive such treatment solely through civil or criminal commitment.

There are a number of articles discussing the benefits and detriments of therapeutic courts in general. Without recounting all of the arguments here, suffice to say that both sides raise valid concerns.

One of the major benefits put forward in favor of therapeutic courts is that they encourage problem solving in what is otherwise very much an adversarial system. The prosecution benefits by reducing recidivism and increasing public safety; the defense benefits by obtaining treatment for the defendant that might not otherwise be available. Another benefit advanced by proponents is that therapeutic courts provide for more intensive probation supervision. Opponents point to the use of a large amount of resources on a relatively small population, which leaves fewer resources for the rest of the system. Critics also cite the appearance of more favorable treatment being afforded the defendants in such courts than the defendants in the other courts in the system. Critics assert that therapeutic courts erode the traditional adversarial roles that underlie the criminal justice system, and therefore lead to less vigorous representation by the attorneys involved.<sup>84</sup>

4.5.2 Philosophy Of Mental Health Courts

Most, if not all, mental health courts have as their primary goal some variation on the same theme. That theme is to protect public safety and reduce recidivism by securing treatment for those whose criminal behavior is caused at least in part by a mental illness that is amenable to treatment and who are willing to accept such treatment.<sup>85</sup>

As an inducement to participate in voluntary commitment through a mental health court, the defendant receives a settlement offer that is more generous than he/she would ordinarily receive.<sup>86</sup> In return, the prosecution resolves the case in a manner that increases the likelihood of protecting public safety and reducing recidivism beyond that which could be achieved if the case were resolved without mental health treatment. Thus, regardless of how mental health courts state their respective philosophies, they all tend to be voluntary.

A defendant does not waive any trial rights unless he/she enters into a voluntary commitment agreement through the mental health court. Thus, if a defendant does not want to participate in the voluntary commitment offered by mental health court, he/she is not required to do so. The defendant can simply decline the settlement offer and proceed as with any other criminal case, either by trial or by settlement without regard to voluntary commitment.<sup>87</sup> If the prosecution does not wish to participate because it believes the case is not appropriate for mental health court, it can simply decline to make the settlement offer.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

4.5.3 Participation Based Upon Crime Type And/Or Criminal History

Mental health courts sometimes limit the cases that they accept based on the level of crime charged. For example, there are some mental health courts nationally that focus solely on defendants charged with felonies.<sup>88</sup> In Washington, mental health courts generally exist in a district or a municipal court and therefore can only accept non-felony cases. There is no legal impediment to a county creating a mental health court that includes defendants charged with either felonies or non-felonies, and that is presided over by a superior court judge. Nor is there anything that precludes a prosecutor from refiling a felony as a nonfelony in a district or municipal court. This latter process is often referred to as a “felony drop down”.<sup>89</sup>

Mental health courts sometimes limit the cases that they accept based on the nature of the offense charged. For example, some mental health courts only accept defendants charged with non-violent offenses. Others accept defendants charged with violent offenses only with the victim’s approval. Still others accept a defendant regardless of the crime charged.

Mental health courts sometimes limit the cases that they accept based on a defendant’s criminal history. For example, some mental health courts only accept defendants who do not have a prior conviction for a violent offense. Others accept defendants with any criminal history if the court’s other criteria are met.<sup>90</sup>

4.5.4 Structure Governing Form Of Voluntary Criminal Commitment

Mental health courts are formed under one of three structures. There is no “one-size-fits-all” structure that will work for every mental health court. A structure that works well in an urban or suburban jurisdiction may not work well in a rural jurisdiction. Some jurisdictions can provide greater economic support or better access to services than other jurisdictions. Additional considerations include the general culture within the jurisdiction, the level of support for the mental health court from other parts of the court system or from service providers, and the general relationship between the court, the prosecution and the defense bar.

4.5.4.1 Pure Diversion System

In a pure diversion system, the defendant and the prosecution agree to continue the case for a specified period of time<sup>91</sup> without a finding of guilt. Depending on the jurisdiction, that agreement might be referred to as a stipulated order of continuance, dispositional continuance, continuance on conditions, or diversion agreement, among other names. Regardless of the name used, the common features are that the defendant waives his/her trial rights and has an opportunity to have the case dismissed without a finding of guilt.

During the term of the agreement, the defendant must meet certain conditions, obviously including mental health treatment. The prosecution agrees that if the defendant has complied with all of the conditions, then the prosecution will move to dismiss the case, or to amend to a lesser charge. The defendant agrees that if the court finds that he/she willfully failed to comply with the terms of the agreement, then the court may determine guilt based solely on the face of the police report. Because relapse is a common occurrence for those who have a serious, acute mental health and/or chemical dependency issue, it is important that the parties have confidence in the judge’s ability to determine when it is appropriate to revoke the diversion agreement or to permit the defendant to continue in mental health court. If the judge tends to revoke diversion agreements quickly, the defense is less likely to recommend mental health court to defendants. On the other hand, if the judge virtually never revokes diversion agreements, the prosecution is less likely to make a diversionary offer.

Pure diversion systems typically employ clearly delineated guidelines and predictable outcomes, and limit participation to defendants who pose a lower public safety risk based on the crime charged and their criminal history. That makes pure diversion an easier system to set up and enables the parties to assess the defendant’s potential participation more clearly. On the other hand, this limits the mental health court’s effectiveness by accepting only those who pose the lowest level of public safety risk, and the clear guidelines leave little room for flexibility.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

4.5.4.2 Pure Plea System

In a pure plea system, the defendant is required to plead guilty and is placed on probation.<sup>92</sup> The defendant waives his/her trial rights but is not offered an opportunity for a diversionary agreement that will resolve the case short of a guilty plea.

Pure plea systems tend to serve those who are charged with more serious crimes, or who have a more serious criminal history. That enables them to accept cases that pose a greater public safety risk, so that positive results from the commitment create a greater impact on public safety. The requirement of a guilty plea more clearly allocates criminal culpability, which in turn gives greater comfort to the victim(s). On the other hand, pure plea systems tend to overlook those who, though charged with a less serious crime or possessing a less serious criminal history, nevertheless pose a meaningful public safety risk. Requiring a guilty plea rather than providing a diversion option may impact future housing or employment options for defendants.

4.5.4.3 Hybrid System

In a hybrid system, some defendants are required to plead guilty while others are offered a diversionary agreement. The nature of the crime charged, the defendant's criminal history, and the specific facts of the case determine whether there is a guilty plea or diversion offer.

Hybrid systems are the most flexible of the three systems. They can handle a wider range of cases, and therefore a wider range of mental illness issues. They can accept those who pose high public safety risks regardless of the charge or criminal history, especially "felony dropdown" cases in which felony charges are amended to gross misdemeanors or misdemeanors and can also accept those who pose less of a public safety risk but still are charged with crimes. On the other hand, the lack of clear and consistent protocols for case dispositions means that case outcomes may not be as consistent as with either of the other two systems.

4.5.5 King County District Court's Regional Mental Health Court (KCRMHC)

King County district court established its mental health court in February, 1999 and was the second mental health court in the country.<sup>93</sup> It became a "regional" court in 2010, as explained in section 5.5.2. below. As a hybrid system encompassing both diversionary and plea aspects, it provides an up-close look at how one mental health court functions.

4.5.5.1 KCRMHC Program Objectives

The stated program goals of the KCRMHC are:

"The King County Regional Mental Health Court seeks to increase effective cooperation between two systems that have traditionally not worked closely together- the mental health treatment system and the criminal justice system. [It's] mission is to engage, support and facilitate the sustained stability of individuals with mental health disorders within the criminal justice system, while reducing recidivism and increasing community safety. Using a wraparound approach, the Regional Mental Health Court team meets frequently with the offender to assess needs, provide positive feedback and problem solving, and require accountability for non-compliance with treatment and probation conditions."<sup>94</sup>

4.5.5.2 KCRMHC Eligibility Requirements

King County's eligibility criteria consist of four components: diagnostic criteria, amenability criteria, available resources criteria, and nexus (between the mental illness and the criminal justice involvement) criteria.<sup>95</sup> The defendant has a number of resources available to assist in demonstrating that he/she meets each of the criteria. These include attorneys and mental health professionals.<sup>96</sup>

To meet diagnostic criteria, a defendant must suffer from a severe and persistent major mental illness that has been clinically shown to respond positively to psychotropic and/or therapeutic intervention. Typical diagnoses include Bipolar I Disorder, Schizophrenia, and Schizoaffective Disorder, but this list is by no means exclusive. In appropriate cases, exceptions are made.

To meet amenability criteria, the defendant must demonstrate motivation to engage in and maintain services that are clinically indicated and recommended. For an individual who is in-custody, treatment engagement and compliance history will be a significant part of assessing amenability. For an individual who is out of custody, he or she must demonstrate amenability by engaging in and maintaining treatment compliance.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

To meet resource availability criteria, the defendant must show that resources are available to help him/her achieve stability in the community and adequately address behaviors contributing to the defendant's involvement in the criminal justice system.

Finally, to meet nexus criteria, the defendant must show that there is a connection between the individual's mental health symptoms and the circumstances or behavior leading to the individual's current involvement in the criminal justice system.

In order for the defense and prosecution to determine if the case is appropriate, the defendant must sign a release of information regarding past mental health treatment. A defendant who declines to sign the release of information will not be eligible for mental health court but will be able to defend the charge(s) in the same manner as any other defendant.

What truly differentiates KCRMHC from other mental health courts is its "regional" nature, which is based on its jurisdictional criteria. Any nonfelony case filed into King County district court by the county prosecutor meets the jurisdictional criteria. Any nonfelony case filed by a city prosecutor, whether in a municipal court within King County or in King County district court pursuant to a contract for court services,<sup>97</sup> is eligible for consideration. If the case meets the other eligibility criteria and is accepted into KCRMHC, the county prosecutor will refile the case into KCRMHC and the city prosecutor will move to dismiss the city case. Any felony case filed in King County superior court is also eligible for consideration. If the case meets the other criteria and the KCRMHC team wants to accept the case into mental health court, the county prosecutor will re-file the case as a gross misdemeanor or misdemeanor into KCRMHC and, upon acceptance of a guilty plea by the court, will move to dismiss the felony case in superior court.

4.5.5.3 KCRMHC Team

KCRMHC could not function as effectively as it does without the people who fill the various roles on the team. Those roles are summarized below:

- Judge: The KCRMHC judge presides over all mental health court calendars. He/she must be familiar with the issues and statutes surrounding ability to stand trial and must be sensitive to the unique nature of the defendants appearing in the court. The judge also provides leadership and sets the overall tone of the KCRMHC team.
- Court Clinician: The court clinician is a mental health professional who serves as a gatekeeper in the mental health court. He/she obtains necessary releases of information, interviews defendants who may be eligible for mental health court and coordinates mental health treatment information. For those defendants who are at the predisposition stage, the court clinician attempts to arrange for release from jail on conditions including treatment, if that is appropriate in light of public safety. The court clinician also serves in a capacity similar to that of a probation counselor, except that the defendant has not yet resolved the case.
- Probation Mental Health Specialists: The current probation officers generally have experience working within a treatment system and have social work or psychology educational backgrounds. They serve in the same capacity as a probation officer in a non-mental health court case. They work with and supervise defendants who have entered into diversionary agreements or who have pled guilty. The probation officers monitor compliance, report non-compliance to the court along with their recommendation for a response by the court, which might include imposing or not imposing a sanction, and keep the court and the attorneys informed about the defendant's compliance with the voluntary commitment. Their entire caseload consists of therapeutic court cases.<sup>98</sup>
- Program Manager: The program manager serves as a liaison to the outside, as well as for the internal members of the team.
- Court Staff: In addition to carrying out the court's general procedures, the mental health court staff must learn jargon specific to the mental health court and specialized procedures within the court. They help engender communication among the team members and prepare the daily listing of cases for that afternoon's calendar. This enables the KCRMHC team (other than the judge) to meet prior to court each afternoon to go over all of the cases to be heard that day. The pre-court conference is a vital part of the KCRMHC team's functioning.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

- Prosecutor: The King County Prosecuting Attorney's Office provides prosecutors for the mental health court who have specific and intensive training and experience within the mental health court as well as outside of the mental health court. The specialized prosecutors provide continuity and consistency in the court and help carry out the Office's policies toward the mental health court. There are also specialized staff who carry out important work within the office coordinating case calendaring and other aspects in support of the mental health court, including a victim's advocate.
- Public Defenders: The public defender's office provides specialized attorneys who work full time in the mental health court, as well as an experienced social worker assigned to the court. The social worker assists the defense attorneys in assessing the appropriateness of particular cases for mental health court, partly by meeting with the defendant and partly by communicating with the court monitor if there has been a valid release of information.

4.5.6 Seattle Municipal Court's Mental Health Court (SMMHC)

Established in March 1999, Seattle Municipal Court is the first Municipal Mental Health Court, and the fourth mental health court of any kind, in the nation.<sup>99</sup> Like KCRMHC, it is a hybrid system encompassing both diversionary and plea aspects.

4.5.6.1 Court's Goals

The stated goals of SMMHC are:

- Improve public safety,
- Reduce jail time and repeat interaction with the criminal justice system for persons with mental illness,
- Connect participating individuals with mental illness to needed mental health services
- Improve participants' access to housing and linkages with other critical supports.<sup>100</sup>

The court strives to achieve its goals through "voluntary" commitment.

4.5.6.2 SMMHC Eligibility Requirements

Seattle Municipal Court's criminal jurisdiction, as with all municipal courts in Washington, is limited to non-felony cases.<sup>101</sup> Seattle's mental health court, as a hybrid court, accepts defendants without regard to the non-felony crime charged, and without regard to criminal history, so long as both the prosecution and defense agree that the case is appropriate.

- In order for the defense and prosecution to determine if the case is appropriate, the defendant must sign a release of information regarding past mental health treatment. A defendant who declines to sign the release of information will not be eligible for mental health court but will be able to defend the charge(s) in the same manner as any other defendant.
- A defendant must meet diagnostic, amenability, nexus, insight, and willingness criteria. In terms of diagnosis, any severe and persistent mental illness with psychotic features will suffice. This could include Schizophrenia, Schizoaffective Disorder, or Bipolar 1 Disorder with Psychotic Features. The remaining criteria are similar to those for KCRMHC, even if there are slightly more formally labelled categories in SMMHC.<sup>102</sup>

4.5.7 Relationship Between Mental Health Court Structure And Voluntary Commitment

Both KCRMHC and SMMHC follow the "hybrid" structure discussed above.<sup>103</sup> Some defendants receive a diversionary, or dispositional continuance, agreement, in which case the voluntary criminal commitment stems from a disposition short of trial or conviction. Other defendants are required to plead guilty and receive either a deferred or a suspended sentence. In that case, the voluntary criminal commitment stems from a finding of guilt. The mental health court team refers to the voluntary criminal commitment conditions as "conditions of sentence", or COS for short, regardless of whether the COS arise from a diversionary or plea disposition. The COS always includes mental health treatment as well as other standard conditions.<sup>104</sup> One of the probation counselors supervises, or monitors, the defendant's compliance with COS.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

In most cases, both prosecution and defense agree on what amounts to a trial run, rather than immediately to conditions the defendant may be incapable of complying with. The trial run is accomplished through a mechanism referred to as “conditions of release”, or COR for short. The court imposes the COR as a basis for releasing the defendant from custody, subject to conditions of release that are substantially identical to the conditions of the COS that the defendant would be agreeing to upon a disposition. The court clinician (in KCRMHC) or court liaison (in SMMHC) helps set up the COR and monitors the defendant’s compliance.

The court has the responsibility and the authority to set conditions of release or to set bail, just as in any other case, with or without the agreement of the parties. As a practical matter in both KCRMHC and SMMHC cases, the overwhelming number of COR imposed by the court have the agreement of both parties.

4.5.8 Need For Outcome Measures

The concept of voluntary criminal commitment is an intriguing one, as is the concept of mental health courts. But intriguing and effective are two different things, and it is effectiveness that holds sway over public opinion, political reality, and the government budget process. Effectiveness can be measured quantitatively, i.e. statistically, or qualitatively, i.e., anecdotally. Both are valid measures if the factors being measured are valid.

As between the criminal justice and social services systems, one would probably be more likely to attribute quantitative analysis to criminal justice and qualitative analysis to social services. But there are actually quantitative or statistical measures valuable to each system. For example, the criminal justice system would probably look for decreases in the length of jail stay, the number of bench warrants for failure to appear or the number of new criminal charges over a period of time. The social services system would probably look at the increase in people served by outpatient service providers or the extent medications are provided to those who need but cannot afford them, or the decrease in involuntary civil commitment.

Which statistical measurement is the “right” one? It depends in part upon the section of the budget that funds the mental health court. If funding flows from criminal justice money, then the jail or the criminal-charging statistics are more important. If it is the social services or health section, then the service statistics are more important.

Qualitative measures might sound difficult to conduct in a setting like mental health court, but they have been done for KCRMHC<sup>105</sup> and SMMHC.<sup>106</sup> They tend to focus on the defendant, which may or may not satisfy public opinion or political reality.

4.6 Conclusion

Commitment of adults based on mental illness has traditionally stemmed from the civil or criminal systems and has been involuntary in nature. The advent of mental health courts has created a new form of voluntary commitment that springs from the criminal system. Whether it is stated directly or not, one of the sought-after results from voluntary commitment through mental health courts is a decrease in the extent of involuntary civil or criminal commitment for mentally ill people charged with crimes. Only time will tell if that result is attainable.

---

<sup>1</sup> By Hon. Michael J. Finkle, Judge, King County District Court, Washington.

This chapter is intended to help educate members of the bench, the bar and the public about the law. The author makes neither express nor implied warranties regarding the use of these materials, and these materials are not provided as legal rulings or legal advice. Each judge and attorney must depend upon his, her or their own legal knowledge and expertise in the use of these materials.

<sup>2</sup> There are several other commitment laws that this chapter does cover. On the civil side, Chapter 71.09 RCW applies to civil commitment of sexually violent predators, and Chapter 71.34 RCW applies to civil commitment of minors based on a mental disorder. In 2016, the legislature repealed most of the provisions of then-Chapter 70.96A RCW, which applied to involuntary commitment of adults based on alcohol or chemical dependency. See 2016 s.p.s. ch. 29, section 301, effective April 1, 2018. Those provisions have been moved primarily to Chapters 71.05 and 71.24 RCW. See, e.g. RCW 71.05.010, 71.05.150 (commitment based upon “behavioral health disorder”, which is defined as either a mental disorder or substance use disorder, or a co-occurring mental disorder and substance use disorder); RCW

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

71.05.010, 71.05.153 (emergency commitment based upon behavioral health disorder); RCW 71.24.025, including substance use disorder treatment services within the definition of “behavioral health services”). The legislature has also created “enhanced services facilities” to provide treatment and services to those for whom acute inpatient treatment is not medically necessary and for whom placement in other licensed facilities is not appropriate. Chapter 70.97 RCW. On the criminal side, Chapter 13.40 RCW applies to juveniles and may grant the trial court discretion not to apply adult standards under Chapter 10.77 RCW. See State v. E.C., 83 Wn.App. 523, 922 P.2d 152 (1996) (involving 90-day period prior to dismissal under former RCW 10.77.090, currently RCW 10.77.086, 10.77.088).

<sup>3</sup> As a practical matter, mental health professionals initiate the vast majority of civil commitment actions.

<sup>4</sup> Chapter 71.05 RCW. See section 2.

<sup>5</sup> Chapter 10.77 RCW. See section 3.

<sup>6</sup> The term “system” implies a self-contained series of procedures. But as the chapter asserts, the civil and criminal commitment systems are more intertwined than they are discrete.

<sup>7</sup> See section 4.

<sup>8</sup> See section 5.

<sup>9</sup> RCW 71.05.050(1) describes a person’s right to apply for voluntary commitment to any public or private agency. By definition, the voluntary aspect of the commitment occurs without a court order, and is therefore beyond the scope of this chapter.

<sup>10</sup> See Chapter 71.05 RCW and cases interpreting it for more specific details. This chapter is intended to familiarize the reader with Washington’s general principles and statutes behind civil commitment on an introductory level. It is not intended to serve as a practice guide or to substitute for a practitioner reviewing the statutes and case law on their own. There are many appellate decisions interpreting and limiting the application of the statutes and cases cited in this chapter. There are also many statutory provisions and cases that clarify, limit or expand the general principles discussed in this chapter. Those cases and statutes are beyond the scope of this chapter, but anyone practicing in this area of law will need to review them.

<sup>11</sup> RCW 71.05.150(1)-(2); 71.05.153(1)-(2). The concept of “developmental disability” also impacts the civil commitment provisions. The definition of “developmental disability” is incorporated from RCW 71A.10.020(5) by RCW 71.05.020. The impact on the civil commitment process for a respondent who suffers from a developmental disability is beyond the scope of this article. The statutes cited use the phrase “behavioral health disorder” rather than “mental health disorder. RCW 71.05.020 defines a behavioral health disorder as including both mental and substance use disorders. For purposes of this chapter, the phrase behavioral health disorder will be limited to mental disorders and co-occurring mental and substance use disorders.

<sup>12</sup> See RCW 71.05.020.

<sup>13</sup> See RCW 71.05.150; RCW 71.05.153.

<sup>14</sup> RCW 71.05.020. Prior to 2018, the phrase was “Designated Mental Health Professional”, and prior to 2005 the phrase was “County Designated Mental Health Professional. Many people continue, incorrectly, to use the term DMHP or CDMHP.

<sup>15</sup> RCW 71.05.130.

<sup>16</sup> RCW 71.05.153.

<sup>17</sup> RCW 71.05.150.

<sup>18</sup> RCW 71.05.150; 71.05.153.

<sup>19</sup> RCW 71.05.170; RCW 71.05.180.

<sup>20</sup> RCW 71.05.230.

<sup>21</sup> RCW 71.05.170; 71.05.201(7); RCW 71.05.240.

<sup>22</sup> There are different burdens of proof for the various hearings. For purposes of this article, I am not identifying the particular burden of proof applicable to a particular hearing.

<sup>23</sup> RCW 71.05.210 (1)(b).

<sup>24</sup> There is a provision permitting the DCR to file a petition, but the petition must be signed by at least one person from the facility and need not be signed by the DCR if two professional staff from the facility sign. See RCW 71.05.230.

<sup>25</sup> RCW 71.05.260(2), 71.05.280, 71.05.320.

<sup>26</sup> The court or jury must determine whether the best interests of the respondent or others would be served by a less restrictive treatment, commonly referred to as a less restrictive alternative or a less restrictive order. Even if a jury hears the case, the court determines what happens to the respondent once the jury returns a verdict. If the court or jury finds that the best interests are not served by less restrictive treatment, the court must remand the respondent to a DSHS facility for 90 days of inpatient treatment. If the court or jury finds that best interests are served by less restrictive treatment, the court must either remand the respondent to DSHS for 90 days of inpatient treatment or to a less restrictive alternative treatment for 90 days. In this context, DSHS includes a facility certified by DSHS to administer 90 days of treatment. See RCW 71.05.320(1).

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

<sup>27</sup> RCW 71.05.320.

<sup>28</sup> RCW 71.05.320.

<sup>29</sup> See RCW 71.05.325-.340; 71.05.590-.595.

<sup>30</sup> See RCW 10.77.065(1)(b); 10.77.084-.088.

<sup>31</sup> RCW 10.77.110.

<sup>32</sup> See RCW 10.77.010.

<sup>33</sup> Id.

<sup>34</sup> RCW 9A.12.010.

<sup>35</sup> See State v. Klein, 156 Wn.2d 103, 116-117, 124 P.3d 644 (2005).

<sup>36</sup> I cannot take sole credit for the phrases “ability to stand trial” or “ability to proceed”, or their progeny. When I was a prosecutor with the City of Seattle, former public defenders Duncan Lewis and Russell Kurth and I mutually came to recognize the acerbic nature of the phrase “incompetency” and came up with the phrase “ability to stand trial”. A person’s ability to stand trial should not be confused with mental status defenses under chapter 10.77 RCW and case law. One cannot raise a mental status defense unless one is first able to stand trial. In addition, a person can be unable to proceed at post-trial stages.

<sup>37</sup> This discussion concerns only the ability to stand trial. Ability to proceed issues may arise at any stage of the criminal process, including sentencing after trial. See RCW 10.77.050 (no criminal defendant may be tried, convicted or sentenced while unable to proceed). Compare RCW 10.77.060 (ability to proceed evaluation whenever there is reason to doubt the defendant’s ability) (emphasis added) with RCW 10.77.084(1)(a) (stay of proceedings and consideration of restoration treatment prior to judgment) (emphasis added).

<sup>38</sup> RCW 10.77.010.

<sup>39</sup> The legislature has enacted “recommended” and “mandatory” time frames that DSHS should and must follow during the ability to stand trial process. See RCW 10.77.068, as amended by SSSB 5664 (2022 legislative session). SSSB 5664 was enacted at least in part in response to a series of opinions, collectively referred to as Trueblood, in which the Western District of Washington has found the State in contempt of court for failing to meet constitutional time guidelines. See Trueblood et al. v. Washington Department of Social and Health Services et al., Trueblood, et al., v. Washington Department of Social and Health Services, et al., 101 F.Supp.3d 1010 (W.D. WA 2015) (effective only as to admission to inpatient treatment for restoration services), vacated and remanded, 822 F.3d 1037 (9th Cir. 2016) (vacating and remanding only as to in-jail evaluations; admission for treatment not raised on appeal). 2016 WL 4268933 (W.D. WA 2016), remanded from 822 F.3d 1037 (9th Cir. 2016), motion for reconsideration denied, 2016 WL 4418180 (W.D. WA 2016); Trueblood, et al., v. Washington Department of Social and Health Services, et al., Order Adopting (in Part) the Parties’ Mediated Settlement Agreement (April 27, 2017). The legislature has also stated that the failure to comply with the target dates is not to form the basis for a contempt proceeding for a motion to dismiss. See RCW 10.77.068. But the issue of whether RCW 10.77.068 limits the court’s options, and what happens if DSHS fails to meet the time guidelines, and ability to proceed issues at stages other than the trial stage, pose complex questions that are beyond the scope of this chapter. See, e.g., State v. Sims, 193 Wn.2d 86 (2019) (discussion of contempt as remedy for violation of time limits under Chapter 10.77 RCW); State v. Hand, 192 Wn.2d 289 (2018) (dismissal with prejudice is not proper remedy for failure to provide timely restoration treatment); State v. Luvert, 499 P.3d 211 (2021)(trial court has authority to award compensatory contempt sanctions to detainee for failure to comply with time limits under chapter 10.77 RCW); State v. Kidder, 197 Wn.App. 292 (2016) (dismissal without prejudice is a proper remedy for failure to provide timely restoration treatment). See also Trueblood, supra.

<sup>40</sup> RCW 10.77.060(1)(a).

<sup>41</sup> RCW 10.77.060(3).

<sup>42</sup> See RCW 10.77.060(3)(f). A similar report is required at the end of any restoration period. For defendants charged with a felony the report following the second restoration period must also include “an assessment of the defendant’s future dangerousness which is evidence-based regarding predictive validity.” RCW 10.77.084(5).

<sup>43</sup> Chapter 10.77 RCW sets out a series of procedures that apply as soon as the ability to stand trial is at issue. This chapter is focusing only on the general concepts as they relate to civil commitment and is not intended to provide guidance for handling ability to stand trial issues.

<sup>44</sup> There are three categories of felonies. Unless otherwise provided by a specific statute, Class A felonies are punishable by up to life in prison and a $50,000 fine, Class B felonies by up to 10 years in prison and a $20,000 fine, and Class C felonies by up to 5 years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Non-felony cases are comprised of gross misdemeanors and misdemeanors. Unless otherwise provided by a specific statute, gross misdemeanors are punishable by up to 364 days in jail and a $5,000 fine, and misdemeanors by up to 90 days in jail and a $1,000 fine. See RCW 9A.20.010; 9A.20.021.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

<sup>45</sup> There are two categories of non-felony cases: gross misdemeanors and misdemeanors. Unless otherwise provided by a specific statute, gross misdemeanors are punishable by up to 364 days in jail and a $5,000 fine, and misdemeanors by up to 90 days in jail and a $1,000 fine. See RCW 9A.20.010; 9A.20.021. Gross misdemeanors and misdemeanors are often generically referred to as “misdemeanors”

<sup>46</sup> RCW 10.77.086(1). “Violent” offenses are defined in RCW 9.94A.030(55).

<sup>47</sup> RCW 10.77.086(2).

<sup>48</sup> RCW 10.77.086(4). This option is not available for a defendant whose inability to stand trial is solely the result of a developmental disability “which is such that [ability to stand trial] is not reasonably likely to be regained during an extension.” Id.

<sup>49</sup> RCW 10.77.086(5).

<sup>50</sup> A “serious offense” is defined in RCW 10.77.092. Some offenses are serious per se (RCW 10.77.092(1)), and some may be found serious by the trial court in a particular case even if not listed as serious per se (RCW 10.77.092(2)).

<sup>51</sup> RCW 10.77.088.

<sup>52</sup> RCW 10.77.088.

<sup>53</sup> RCW 9A.12.010(1).

<sup>54</sup> This article discusses the mental status defense at a very basic level. The technical, strategic aspects of this defense are beyond the scope of this chapter.

<sup>55</sup> RCW 10.77.080.

<sup>56</sup> RCW 9A.12.010(2); RCW 10.77.030(2); RCW 10.77.080.

<sup>57</sup> RCW 10.77.040 (if jury verdict); RCW 10.77.080 (if court ruling on motion, judge must make findings in substantially same form as RCW 10.77.040).

<sup>58</sup> RCW 10.77.040; 10.77.080.

<sup>59</sup> RCW 10.77.110.

<sup>60</sup> RCW 10.77.025(1).

<sup>61</sup> See, e.g., RCW 10.77.110(3); 10.77.120-10.77.200. Conditional release under Chapter 10.77 RCW should not be confused with conditional release in the civil commitment context under RCW 71.05.340

<sup>62</sup> State v. Atsbeha, 142 Wn.2d 904, 914, 16 P.3d 626 (2001).

<sup>63</sup> Depending upon the felony charged, that period could range from 45-360 days. See RCW 10.77.086. Even though the trial court must have found the defendant unable to stand trial before ordering restoration treatment, that does not shift the burden to the prosecution to prove the defendant has become able to stand trial; the burden remains with the party challenging that ability. State v. Coley, 180 Wn.2d 543, 326 P.3d 702 (2014). In most cases, the party challenging ability to stand trial is the defendant, but that is not necessarily always the case.

<sup>64</sup> RCW 10.77.084(1); 10.77.086(5).

<sup>65</sup> RCW 10.77.084(1); 10.77.086(5)

<sup>66</sup> RCW 71.05.280(3); RCW 71.05.320(1).

<sup>67</sup> RCW 71.05.310.

<sup>68</sup> Not all non-felony defendants found unable to stand trial are required to be referred for civil commitment evaluation. See RCW 10.77.088(6). Compare that to felony defendants found unable to stand trial after unsuccessful restoration treatment, who are required to be referred for some form of civil evaluation. See RCW 10.77.086.

<sup>69</sup> This also includes the situation in which the court finds, that the defendant is not likely to become able to stand trial. See RCW 10.77.084, 10.77.088(4).

<sup>70</sup> See RCW 10.77.088(5)(b); 71.05.235(2).

<sup>71</sup> See RCW 10.77.088(5)(a); RCW 71.05.235(1) (basing the proceedings on RCW 71.05.230(4)).

<sup>72</sup> RCW 71.05.235.

<sup>73</sup> RCW 10.77.088(6).

<sup>74</sup> Initial detentions are discussed at section 2.3.1., supra.

<sup>75</sup> Note, however, that if the initial ability to stand trial evaluation recommends referral for a civil commitment evaluation, RCW 10.77.065(1)(b) might require referral notwithstanding anything in RCW 10.77.088(6).

<sup>76</sup> This phrase is defined in RCW 10.77.010. Note that the definition of “professional person” in Chapter 10.77 RCW is somewhat similar, but not identical, to the definition of “professional person” in RCW 71.05.020.

<sup>77</sup> RCW 10.77.025(2).

<sup>78</sup> Id. Note that in this provision of Chapter 10.77 RCW the legislature used the civil commitment phrase “mental disorder”, which is defined in RCW 71.05.020. Yet in defining ability to stand trial (RCW 10.77.010) and the mental status defense (RCW 9A.12.010), the legislature used the undefined phrase “mental disease or defect”.

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

<sup>79</sup> RCW 10.77.025(3).

<sup>80</sup> See RCW 10.77.065(1)(b).

<sup>81</sup> The discussion in this entire section is based on the presumption that the defendant is able to stand trial and does not wish to assert a mental status defense or a diminished capacity defense.

<sup>82</sup> These two courts have been chosen because the author has worked in both. The author presided over KCRMHC as a judge from 2012-2013 and worked as an attorney in SMMHC for the first 11 years of its existence from 1999-2010. There is no single “perfect” type of mental health court, and the author does not mean to suggest that a mental health court must follow their formats to be successful. The key point is that a mental health court should match the particular culture and situation within its particular jurisdiction.

<sup>83</sup> There are other forms of therapeutic courts that are beyond the scope of this section. They include veterans courts, community courts, and many others.

<sup>84</sup> See generally M. Perlin, “The Judge He Cast His Robe Aside”: Mental Health Courts, Dignity and Due Process, 3 Mental Health Law and Policy Journal 1 (2013); A. Harper and M. Finkle, Mental Health Courts, 51 Judges’ Journal 4 (2012); E. Johnston, Theorizing Mental Health Courts, 89 Washington University Law Review 519 (2012).

<sup>85</sup> Information about the defendant’s mental illness and current and past treatment for that illness are necessary for the prosecutor or for the defense attorney to evaluate whether their respective clients should agree to a mental health court disposition. The defendant has a strong privacy right in that information, and will not be able to participate in mental health court without signing an appropriate release of information based on advice of counsel.

<sup>86</sup> Whether a particular mental health court offer is more “generous” can be open to debate. Mental health court involves intensive supervision, and the defendant commits to comply with a treatment plan that can stretch over two years. There is always the possibility of a “sanction” for failure to comply, which is highly dependent upon the specific situation and the particular philosophy of the mental health court judge.

<sup>87</sup> A defendant involuntarily placed in a mental health court is not likely to comply willingly with treatment, and therefore is not likely to benefit from the court.

<sup>88</sup> Two examples are the felony mental health courts in Cook County, Illinois, and in Harris County, Texas. Their respective websites are:

Illinois Circuit Court of Cook County > ABOUT THE COURT > Office of the Chief Judge > Problem-Solving Courts > Mental Health Court Program \(cookcountycourt.org\)(Cook County), and

<http://www.justex.net/courts/Drug/MentalHealth/Default.aspx> (Harris County, Texas). The author is not aware of any felony level mental health courts in Washington. KCRMHC does accept “felony dropdown” cases that are amended to misdemeanors or gross misdemeanors from felonies and pled out in KCRMHC.

<sup>89</sup> RCW 2.28.010; 2.28.080. KCRMHC routinely accepts such felony drop-downs.

<sup>90</sup> See generally M. Perlin, supra.

<sup>91</sup> In non-felony courts in Washington, the period generally ranges from six months to two years, depending upon the court system and/or the treatment program.

<sup>92</sup> In non-felony courts, the period generally ranges from 12-24 months. The maximum period of court jurisdiction (and therefore of probation) in a non-felony DUI or domestic violence (DV) case is five years and two years for all other non-felony cases. RCW 3.50.330 (municipal courts in cities and towns with a population of 400,000 or less); 3.66.068 (district courts); 35.20.255 (municipal courts in cities with a population of more than 400,000, i.e., Seattle).

<sup>93</sup> See Bureau of Justice Assistance, Emerging Judicial Strategies for the Mentally Ill in the Criminal Caseload: Mental Health Courts in Fort Lauderdale, Seattle, San Bernardino, and Anchorage, accessed online at <https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/bja/182504.pdf>. King County is listed as the second in the nation because San Bernardino’s court commenced as a pilot project in January, 1999 and did not become a full-fledged program until after King County’s mental health court.

<sup>94</sup> See KCRMHC website, which can be accessed online at: <https://www.kingcounty.gov/courts/district-court/regional-mental-health-court.aspx>.

<sup>95</sup> See id. (then click on “Eligibility Criteria” link)

<sup>96</sup> Id.

<sup>97</sup> See RCW 39.34.180(1).

<sup>98</sup> King County District Court also operates a Regional Veterans Court (KCRVC), which is another therapeutic court. The KCRMHC probation counselors also work in the KCRVC.

<sup>99</sup> L. DuBois and T. Martin, Seattle Municipal Mental Health Court Evaluation 5 (2013), which can be accessed online at: <https://www.seattle.gov/Documents/Departments/Court/MHCEvaluation2013.pdf>.

<sup>100</sup> Id.

<sup>101</sup> See RCW 39.34.180(1).

WA Health Law Manual – Fourth Edition - Committed To Commitment: Examining How Adults In Washington Are Committed Based On Mental Illness

---

<sup>102</sup> See SMMHC website, which can be accessed online at: https://www.seattle.gov/Documents/Departments/Court/To be Eligible for Mental Health Court.pdf.

<sup>103</sup> See section 5.4.3., supra, for a description of the hybrid system.

<sup>104</sup> The other conditions relate to such things as housing, reporting to probation, abstaining from alcohol, controlled substances and non-prescribed drugs, not committing any crimes, no threatening harm to self or others, no contact with victims or addresses, and the like.

<sup>105</sup> See, e.g. Mental Illness and Drug Dependency Oversight Committee Annual Reports (2008-2017), which can be accessed online on the King County website at: <https://www.kingcounty.gov/depts/community-human-services/mental-health-substance-abuse/midd/reports.aspx>; P. Henzel, J. Mayfield, C. Black and B. Felver, The Impact of Mental Health Court on Recidivism and Other Key Outcomes An Evaluation of the King County District Court Regional Mental Health Court (2018), which can be accessed online at: Microsoft Word - King County Mental Health Court Evaluation Final.docx \(wa.gov\).

<sup>106</sup> See, e.g., L. DuBois and T. Martin, supra. See also E. Trupin, H. Richards, D. Wertheimer and C. Bruschi, City of Seattle, Seattle Municipal Court Mental Health Court Evaluation Report 20 (2001), the abstract of which can be accessed online at: <https://www.ncjrs.gov/App/Publications/abstract.aspx?ID=207115>.